

The Greatest Gifts a Parent Can Give

ABOUT THE AUTHOR

Bradford F. Lewis is Executive Director of Sankoré Institute, a non-profit science and education research organization. He received a Bachelors of Science degree in Chemistry and Biology from Gannon University; and he received a Doctorate in Science Education from Florida State University. He conducts research on the teaching and learning of science. Specifically, his work includes: explorations of students' worldview and student-teacher interactions as factors influencing career attainment. The findings of Dr. Lewis' research can be found in over 25 manuscripts published in peer-reviewed journals, popular venues and presented at national and international conferences. This research has also afforded him the opportunity to work with thousands of students, teachers, and parents varying widely in age, ability level and economic background.

Dr. Lewis has accepted several invitations to present his research and ideas on education both nationally and internationally, including places such as India and South Africa. He is a 2003 recipient of the Outstanding Junior Scholar Award, and a 2003 recipient of the US Early Career Researcher Award. He is an active member in five professional associations including the American Educational Research Association (AERA) and the National Association for Research in Science Teaching (NARST). Dr. Lewis has held professorships at the University of Pittsburgh and Morgan State University. He has one son and resides in Cleveland, Ohio with his family.